Zoom Access

For the security of our sessions this year, and in lieu of the printed name badges typical of our physical conferences, SBE has stationed Zoom Hosts in each Zoom session. Attendees will be admitted to each session from its waiting room by the Zoom Host, based on their inclusion on the list of conference registrants as of 6 AM GMT on the day of a given session. Please also be sure that your name in Zoom corresponds to the name with which you registered for the conference.

Please be sure to register for the conference through Cambridge Core before that deadline, so that you are not prevented from accessing any sessions that you wish to attend.

Please also be understanding of the necessary delay to access each session due to this security precaution, and consider arriving a few minutes early.

We recommend that all participants download and install the Zoom desktop app, for an optimal user experience.

Please submit your questions or comments for the presenters through the Q&A function in Zoom. Attendee questions and comments will not be visible to other participants; session chairs will pose a selection of those questions to the presenters during the allotted time.

Fair global distribution of COVID-19 vaccines: the role of firms

Govind Persad

Assistant Professor, U. of Denver Sturm College of Law

During the COVID-19 emergency, all parties involved in developing and distributing COVID-19 vaccine need guidance on their ethical obligations. We focus on pharmaceutical companies' obligations to research, develop, manufacture, and distribute COVID-19 vaccines because these companies' unique capacities in these areas make them indispensable to stemming the pandemic.

We delineate four ethical principles governing the response to COVID, recognizing that, without additional institutional arrangements, they alone do not fully specify pharmaceutical companies' obligations. The optimal response to COVID-19 would satisfy four uncontroversial principles: (1) optimizing vaccine production, including development, testing, manufacturing, and distribution; (2) fair distribution; (3) sustainability; and (4) accountability. The first three are substantive principles and the last is a procedural principle governing the substantive principles' implementation.

We then outline a range of approaches that companies could take in the current pandemic, in order to satisfy these principles' demands and discharge their obligations.
