The Promise of Diversity and the Problem with DEI, Inc.: Why a Corporate Approach to Campus DEI Issues is So Misguided

Amna Khalid

Associate Professor of History, Carleton College (US)

Jeffrey Aaron Snyder

Associate Professor of Educational Studies, Carleton College (US)

Abstract

Attention to persistent inequities in higher education is a most welcome development and long overdue. Over the past several years, colleges and universities have poured money into campus DEI initiatives. But the conventional approach to this work—what Khalid and Snyder call DEI, Inc.—is deeply flawed. Driven by a corporate logic, DEI, Inc. sees education as a product and treats students as consumers. It relies heavily on top-down management, quantitative metrics and outside consultants. By privileging training over education, Khalid and Snyder will argue that the DEI, Inc. model is ultimately counter-productive in terms of achieving vital diversity, equity and inclusion goals.

Amna Khalid is an Associate Professor in the Department of History at Carleton College in Northfield, Minnesota. She specializes in modern South Asian history and the history of medicine.

Born in Pakistan, Amna completed her Bachelor's Degree at Lahore

University of Management Sciences. She went on to earn an M.Phil. in Development Studies and a D.Phil. in History from Oxford University.

Amna is the author of multiple book chapters on the history of public health in nineteenth-century India, with an emphasis on the connections between Hindu pilgrimages and the spread of epidemics.

Growing up under a series of military dictatorships, Amna has a strong interest in issues relating to censorship and free expression. She speaks frequently on academic freedom, free speech and campus politics at colleges and universities as well as at professional conferences. Her essays and commentaries on these same issues have appeared in outlets such as the Chronicle of Higher Education, The Conversation, Inside Higher Ed, and The New Republic. She hosts a podcast and accompanying blog called “Banished,” which explores censorship in the past and present.

Amna is a Fellow at the University of California National Center for Free Speech and Civic Engagement this 2022-2023 academic-year, along with her colleague Jeffrey Aaron Snyder. They are completing a project called “Anti-CRT Bills Come to Campus: Documenting and Analyzing Emerging Threats to Free Expression and Academic Freedom from State Legislatures.”

Jeffrey Aaron Snyder is an Associate Professor in the department of Educational Studies at Carleton College. Snyder's work explores the connections between the history of education and broader trends in U.S. cultural and intellectual history, examining questions about race, national identity and the purpose of public education in a diverse, democratic society.

Snyder has a keen interest in issues of academic freedom and free expression, especially as they relate to liberal arts education. He is a Fellow with the University of California National Center for Free Speech and Civic Engagement this 2022-2023 academic-year, along with his colleague Amna Khalid. They are completing a project called “Anti-CRT Bills Come to Campus: Documenting and Analyzing Emerging Threats to Free Expression and Academic Freedom from State Legislatures.”

Snyder is the author of the book Making Black History: The Color Line, Culture and Race in the Age of Jim Crow. He is a frequent contributor to newspapers and magazines, including The Chronicle of Higher Education, The New Republic and The Washington Post. He holds a B.A. from Carleton, an EdM in Learning and Teaching from the Harvard Graduate School of Education and a PhD in the History of Education from New York University.

Abstract

Diversity, equity, and inclusion (DEI) are emerging as prominent ethical issues in business, society, and higher education. DEI assertions challenge traditional social norms that some regard as unethical constraints on human flourishing while others regard those same norms as essential foundations of business and society. DEI invites discernment of core values and first principles to anchor these conversations about the future of humanity.

What does DEI mean for SBE as an international academic business society? How do we define DEI? What are the intellectual and social foundations of DEI? What are the implications of DEI for SBE internal governance and practice of business and social ethics? How do we integrate DEI in our research, teaching, and managerial practice? How do we model collegial ethical pluralism in an ethically antagonistic polarized world? What guidance can we offer business and organization leaders struggling with DEI issues?

Facilitated by the SBE Diversity Equity and Inclusion committee members, this interactive plenary session is an opportunity for SBE conference participants to explore and discuss DEI issues, concerns, and questions with colleagues. The informal small group roundtable format is designed to foster friendly open inquiry and exchange of diverse ideas and perspectives on DEI with a view towards the future of SBE as a leading global voice for ethics in business and society.

We look forward to a hopeful and inspiring community conversation!

Wild Wild West of Business Ethics: Turning to Silicon Valley for Educational and Research Opportunities

Erika Cheung

Executive Director, Ethics in Entrepreneurship

Abstract

From unicorns to cryptocurrencies, Silicon Valley has now produced an anthology of cautionary business tales. The keynote presentation will give a whistleblower's perspective on one of the largest Silicon Valley fraud cases, Theranos, and more broadly explore why conversations of ethics are urgently needed in innovation and startups. The discussion will explore the ways in which narrative can be leveraged to teach the next generation of business leaders. Additionally, it will explore the role ethicists can play in not only understanding what has happened in the past, but also inform the entrepreneurial community on how to act ethically and responsibly in the future.

Erika Cheung is currently the executive director of Ethics in Entrepreneurship, a non-profit whose mission is to foster ethical questioning, culture, and systems in startups and startup ecosystems. We provide programs catered to workers, investors, and founders.

Erika is an advisor to several family offices, venture capital firms, and governmental investment programs focused on healthcare, biosciences, and biotechnology companies. She invests a portion of her time building cross-border networks between the US and the Asia Pacific region to facilitate the growth of companies operating in emerging markets.

Her first job out of college was working for Theranos, where she subsequently was one of the critical whistleblowers reporting the fraud case to regulators preventing the company from providing false lab results to patients. The Theranos scandal has been extensively covered in the media. She's working towards obtaining her ACFE-certified fraud examiner's license to educate others on fraud prevention strategies and develop programs to protect business stakeholders from high-risk ventures. She is also an advisor to several whistleblower advocacy organizations to support individuals who may be retaliated against while reporting misconduct.

She is passionate about innovation ecosystem building, development, economic mobility, affordable healthcare, and public-interest technology projects. She is an avid mixed martial artist in her free time and hopes to support efforts that leverage martial arts to empower trauma survivors.
